Call to Action to Sustain Education Programs Funded with Expiring Federal COVID-19 Relief

SEPTEMBER 2023

We call on our elected leaders to take immediate action to sustain critical education programs currently supported by temporary federal COVID-19 stimulus funding set to run dry in June 2024.

Over the last few years, New York City Public Schools (NYCPS) benefitted from more than $7 billion in federal stimulus funding. NYCPS used this influx of funding not only to help address temporary pandemic-related challenges, but also to launch and expand a range of essential programs to meet needs that existed long before the pandemic—but had gone unmet or under-funded—and that will remain long after the federal COVID-19 relief funds expire. Notable examples of this year's investments include:

- $456 million for 3-K, allowing the City to guarantee a seat for every three-year-old in 12 of the City's 32 community school districts and doubling the number of children participating in this early learning program from 17,500 in 2019-20 to 35,700 in 2022-23.
- $96 million for preschool special education, helping the City address the significant shortage of legally required preschool special education classes, helping programs recruit and retain certified special education teachers, and adding service providers and staff to help with the development of service plans.
- $67 million to hire 450 school social workers, allowing nearly 194,000 students to gain access to a social worker; even with this investment, there is only one school social worker for every 435 students enrolled in NYCPS schools and more than 240,000 students do not have access to a full-time social worker.
- $65 million for school nurses, enabling every school building to have a nurse; prior to the pandemic, at least 137 schools serving a combined 70,000 students did not have a school nurse.
- $55 million to expand community schools, increasing the number of schools that provide students and their families with wrap-around supports from 266 in 2020-21 to more than 400.
- $12 million for restorative justice practices, allowing more schools to use alternatives to exclusionary discipline that keep students in the classroom while helping them build and repair relationships; this federal funding represents the majority of the City's investment in restorative justice.

- $10 million to hire 60 school psychologists and 15 family workers to address delays in the evaluation process for students with disabilities.
- $10 million to hire bilingual staff to support the education of English Language Learners, only 46% of whom graduated from high school in four years even before the pandemic.
- $9 million for shelter-based coordinators to help children who are homeless get to school every day and access needed educational support.
- $7 million for literacy instruction and dyslexia programming, helping to support screening, new specialized programs for students with dyslexia, and targeted reading interventions in dozens of schools.
- $7 million for translation and interpretation services, which are particularly vital at a time when more than 40% of students speak a language other than English at home and when the need has grown.
- $3.3 million for Student Success Centers in 34 high schools, where trained youth leaders build a culture of college-going in their schools and help their peers with the college admissions process.

The impending expiration of federal COVID-19 funds not only threatens the continuation of these newly-launched and expanded programs; temporary federal funds have also been used to stave off more drastic budget cuts at schools that have seen enrollment declines ($160M in FY 24) and to maintain longstanding initiatives jeopardized by pandemic-related fiscal challenges. As just one example, NYCPS is using:

• $33M in federal COVID-19 funding for Learning to Work—which provides support to over-age, under-credited students to help them earn a high school diploma and develop a post-secondary plan—representing more than 70% of the program's total budget.

This summary does not reflect every investment NYCPS has made using temporary federal stimulus dollars, but underscores the enormously high stakes for students—especially those whose needs have too often been overlooked—as well as the urgent need for elected leaders to act before this funding runs dry. In total, we estimate that NYCPS is investing more than $1 billion in programs and supports to meet needs that will persist far beyond the funding's expiration date.

We are at a critical juncture. Our elected leaders must choose between allowing these programs to end on their watch—dealing a massive setback to public education—or taking action to identify new funding sources so students can continue receiving critical supports and services. We are counting on our elected leaders to sustain essential education programs and build on the progress made, leaving a lasting impact on the lives of students for years to come.
